

I have enjoyed the last few years of privacy that the no-call list has afforded me. Before this list I would get as many as 5 or 6 calls in the evening. When I came home for lunch, I was always guaranteed at least one call. The fact that I happen to have a credit card, loan or other business with a financial institution should not give them the right to call me in my home to solicit more business. I contend that if I want a service or product, I will shop for it. My home should be my sanctuary and I should not be bombarded with unwanted calls. If these companies want to advertise, let them do it with paper, television, radio, mail, etc.
